BOOMING ASHEVILLE

Climate and Consumption Invesby E. A. Curley.

CALLED THE LAND OF THE SKY

However, it is Safe to Say that It Canno Holq a Candle to Utah-Sec?

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Jan. 28.—This region is frequently called the "Mountain Plateau of North Carolina," but that name is misleading. Southeastwardly from the high peaks of the Unaka, the Iron and the Smoky mountains, which separate North Carolina and Tennesser, westwardly and southwestwardly from the Carolina Blue Ridge, and transversely from the high peaks and ridges which irregularly connext these two great chains, secondary ridges and high foothills approach each other. Few of them are less than 2,000 fest above sea level at the lowest of the ravines where they meet the others.

The Blue Raige is the main watershed, and the high cross ridges divide the whole region into a series of hilly head water basins, which gather the falling waters in mountain rills, tumbling brooks, and finally into seven or eight beautiful creeks of large size, which wind their devious way among the lower hills, and finally cutting deep maines between the lofty peaks of the pursue their roundabout journey to the Mississippi and the gulf. On these large creals there are some narrow bottom lands to be estimated in acres, while the hills and mountains are reckoned in square miles from the stage surprises no one; but the and townships. This is, therefore, intra-old time concert goer, if a man, shakes his and townships. This is, therefore, intra-monatrin Carolina, a region among many head and sighs; if a woman, drops a tear insuntains, a lot of irregular basins, but of regret for the wonderful voice and radi-

The hills come together somewhat sharp—perhaps all life stories would be if they ly in V tronglis instead of sweeping down were as well known—is an interesting one.

The climate cannot be dismissed in a the direction of the outlook, the dimen-sions of the meadow, the nugle of the

have been regularly taken in but few places, and wide generalizations must usually take the place of carefully recorded a hove it. The eastwardly and southeastwardly winds precipitated a portion of their moisture on the eastern alone of this mountain, and after passing it and descending to a lower attitude they become comparatively drier, and often cease to drop rain at all. The most disagreeable weather that visits the Atlantic states, however, is that the professional by the perfectional professional and the professional that vasts the Attante Sales, nowers, is that accompanied by the northeastwardly winds. Against them there is a still greater harrier afforded by Craggy, the Black mountain and a third ridge running to the north, the highest point of which is called Yeates' Knob. This mass of mountains lying on the northeast of Asheville. or months aring on the northeast of Asheville and attaining an elevation of more than 6,000 feet above the level of the sea * * * presents a barrier against the northeastern storms so formulable that the clouds are broken to pieces and fall over it is scattered fragments.

The southwesterly winds, however, bring much rain, often continuing for days at a tir rain, often continuing for days at a time; but against them nature has also furnished a protec-tion. From the great Smoky mountain, at a point a little north of west from Asheville, the Ediann mountain, the longest of the cross chains, extends itself entirely across this part of the state to the borders of South Carolina. It attains a general height of at least 6,000 feet, and with its pure extending somewhat toward Asherille, the Old mountain and Pisgah Ridges, for a hundred degrees in distance, it breaks the force of the northwestern winds. It thus happens that most of the rain bearing winds, by passing over legber kinds before reaching this region, have lock a portion of their moisture, and the atmos-phere of the tract is therefore comparatively a

It seems to me that as a whole the Ashe ville basin lacks perfection of shelter by reason of Paint Rock Gap, where the French Broad river cuts its way between the lofty peaks of the Northwestern mountains, and between which and the city of Asheville there is no high intercepting ridge. When a strong wind blows straight into this gap it must reach Asheville with great force, netwithstanding it is much speded by the forest trees. It is a mistake to suppose that high mountains well rounded by decay are in themselves necessarily any great impediment to the wind, it will sweep up their sides and down their slopes very much as the water supply of a house will travel through very crooked pipes. The chief impediment is the forest, which stops one after another the lower strata of the cur-rent, and much more effectively where the land is hilly or mountainous than other-wise. And it is a great mistake to suppuse that such forests afford a mere shel-ter, for the winds that pass them are formed of the middle strata of the air and are especially pure.

The prospect of better health is the chief inducement which western North Carolina at present offers to newcomers from distent places. Many visitors come for mere pleasure, but more come for health, and many of the permanent residents are such visitors who have found employment.

The interstate immigration convention. hich was held here on the 17th, 18th and 13th ult., was not without its interest to the investigator of climate. As aspirants for office flock to a political convention, so the incubators of booms in land and minerals and railway schemes, with good sprinkling of politicians, flock to such gatherings as this one in Asheville. If each boom and each scheme were taken at its own valuation not all the United States currency to be issued under the Alliance sub-treasury plan would suffice to buy them. But each competes with the others. Only interests acknowledged to be com-mon meet with recognition, and many of these common interests of the gathering will run on all fours with those of the general public. Such, I think, were in the main the general results of that convention.

I cannot prophesy what time and persistent in estigation might develop, but I have thus far seen no indication that it would be best for the northern laborer, me chapic or farmer, as such, to emigrate to the south. In that respect the convention seemed to be representative of the condistates, and yet I could not see that any

PAULINE LUCCA HAS RETIRED.

A Chapter from the Life of a One Time Favorite of the Opera.

The news that Pauline Lucca has retired ant face known in the past. Her life story

One of its most characteristic incidents senroely so steep as we should expect to is told by one who knew her well in later the exception. The soil is generally clayey and rich in vegetable mold. Lucca says: "Many times since then I have sung before great audiences made up of finely dressed and distinguished people, but I have never put more effort, more en-thusiasm, more ambition into my voice than I did then. I sang 'May Breeze after I had finished it they would not let me stop. I sang every song I knew, and when I stepped from the platform I was nearly deafened by applause and the tears

Lucca's musical career has been mostly assed in Europe, but America heard her sing often enough to learn to love her pure, strong, sympathetic voice. Her favorite parts were Selika (which Meyerbeer wrote especially for her), in "L'Afri-caine," Carmen, Zerlina and Cherubine.

A Tragedy.

Chapter One.—She was young and pretty as a midsummer dream. He was tall, haughty and rich. She had married him for his tremendous wealth, but at the same time greatly admired his calm, superior way and cynical spirit. They had reached Washington on their wedding journey.

Chapter Two.—The snow came down and Algernon and Henrietta gazed thought fully out of the window. "Let us take a sleigh ride," said Algereon, and the fatai deed was done.

Chapter Three.—Ten years had passed and Algernon came wearily into the hum-ble home which barely sheltered his grow-ing family. Henrietta met him at the door with a sad smile. "Ab, Algernon," she said, "cheer up. Fire years more of hard work and you will have paid all your debt to the liveryman.
